Before and After Using Hog Serum.

A writer in the June Parm and Fire

"I employed a competent veterinarian to administer the serum, and had him buy what he thought was the best serum and virus on the market. The simultaneous method was used. The virus was given in the morning, and the serum in the afternoon. The places on the hams where the injections were to be made were scrubbed clean with soap and water, then thoroughly disinfected. The virus was injected into one ham, and the serum into the other one. Ten days later all of my young hogs were dead, and half of the old herd. The serum wasn't strong enough to stop the cholera the virus had started. One of my herd boars and eight of the brood sows survived, but every one of them had abscesses where the injections had been made.'

places and in a few instances he was called upon either to affirm or deny certain statements which the defense atmade before his confession. In cross examination it was brought out that the crack through which Williams alleged in his confession the rifle was pointed by by Felch and Williams himself, who were working about the sugar house. This statement did not lend color to the declaration said to have been made at some previous time that the crack in the wall was prepared on the day of the murder. Atty. Hoar, with the aid of his colleagues of the defense, held to a relentless cross examination of the witness and sometimes seemed to have brought the young man to the point of confusion. Before cross examination concerning the When asked if he had not stated, in preliminary hearing before Judge Hayford, that Mrs. Felch was in nowise con nected with the crime, the witness flatly denied any such statement. He entered chard white at any pharmacy and two lemons from the grocer and make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms and hands, and see a decidedly negative reply when the at to attend.

"Didn't you say that you wouldn't go because you were afraid people would suspect you?" was the next question. To which the witness made denial and in answering to further questions said that he was on his way to the funeral when arrested; that he had got as far in which made good hay. He is plowing the Felch house as the separator room when an officer served a warrant on him; and that there were with him his wife and his brother and wife.

On the redirect examination that fol-Friday with a picnic, the boys and girls lowed, Williams, in replying to questions being carried for the purpose in the automobile of Frank Church, father of the the gun from Mrs. Felch after the shootteacher, Miss Dorothy Church, to his ing at the sugar house, that the woman home in Royalton, where the picnic was was standing near the southwest corner of the building and that, so far as he The Finley bridge school, taught by knew, there were no others present. He Miss Carrie Eaton, enjoyed a picnic last also repeated his former statement that

Earlier in the cross examination defense sought to compare some of the statements made by the witness in the direct examination with similar allegations contained in the confession credit: ed to Williams. The farmhand had said that he was several feet away from the sugar house when the gun was fired. Atty. Hoar read from the confession: "We went to the sugar house," and then asked the witness if he didn't go as near fore the pair left the woods, as Mrs. when the shooting took place. In the Witness replied that when he looked toward Mrs. Felch he saw the general outline of a bended figure and wasn't sure whether she was on one knee or both.

Asked by Mr. Hoar if he had stated to Fred Smith, an acquaintance, that he would plead guilty to a murder charge if Mrs. Felch were accused, witness denied the statement.

Asked if he told a man named Larry Welch that he went to his home, near earnest endorsement and patronage of the Felch farm, after doing the chores on the night of the murder and remained there, Williams answered that he could

The witness entered another denial when the cross examiner asked him if he barn being built by A. A. Church in told Elrick Emerson, a carpenter, that he planned to leave home because he couldn't afford to board his wife's relatives, a statement that the witness had been boarding his wife's brother and other relatives having been credited to Williams by indirection.

When the cross examination turned toward the sugar house episode, Williams denied having touched the body of Felch and said that he pushed the syrup can out from under the body. Asked why he did not extinguish the light, a lantern flame which continued to burn even though the bullet which killed Felch also sped through the globe, Williams said hat he didn't think of it. In the course of the cross examination the witness admitted that he had been friendly with the dead man. Regarding a pair of rubber boots which nung over the stove in the Felch home on the Sunday when the body of the farmer was discovered, the boots having been left there to dry, it was said, Williams was asked if one of the boots did not fall down and if the incident was not the occasion of a question from Mrs. Williams, who was with him in the Felch home at that time, in which she asked him why he did not pick up the boot; and in continuing the question before the witness had time to answer the first part, Williams was asked if he did not reply, "No, I do not want to kill anyone The witness denied the question attributed to his wife and the alleged to have been made by him and in the redirect examination it was not the property of Williams. The witness was less positive in replying to another question by the cross ex-aminer. Asked if he did not make the statement on the Sunday after the murder that "he was just as good as in the electric chair," Williams said that he didn't recall such a statement, Ex-State's Atty. Williams on Stand.

Former State's Atty. Williams was ne of the witnesses whom attorneys like to question and whose incisive answers are readily taken down by the court reporter. He refused to show confusion when the examiner for the defense asked him whether Otis Williams' confession was taken when the young man was under oath and whether in direct examination or in replying to ques tions propounded by Atty. Hour he measured each answer carefully. On the direct examination he told of making an investigation at the Felch sugar house sometime in the forenoon and afternoon of the Sunday after the murder. He told of finding a piece of lead imbedded in a post in the interior of the sugar house and identified a misshapen bullet submitted by Atty. Gen. Barber as the piece of lend which he dug out of the post and marked with a knife for the purpose of future identification. He said he turned the bullet over to Dr. Stone, the state pathologist. The bullet was admitted as an exhibit. Witness continued his narrative by telling of the position in which the body lay when he arrived at the sugar house. There was a pool of blood under the body and a rifle was lying under Felch, nearly at right angles with the body.

every resemblance to the gun found in the sugar house. On the cross examination Atty. Hoar asked the witness if he saw any finger marks on the gun. The witness could not state positively. Asked if there was any blood on the weapon, the witness tempted to credit to him as having been replied in the affirmative and added that nore or less of one side of the rifle was stained with blood. He didn't see marks indicating the pressure of three fingers on a part of the gun pointed out by Mr Mrs. Felch was made in the fall of 1915 Hoar, but later said that marks which looked like finger prints were discern ible on another section of the gun and that the marks were the subject of some discussion afterward when a more thorough examination was being made. Mr. Williams said the rifle was turned over to an expert and when asked if he thought an expert could determine finger marks any more than he (Williams could, witness replied in the affirmative. gun had ended Mr. Williams had testi-fied that he unwrapped the weapon from a sheet in which it was placed after the first investigation in the presence of Drs. Stone and Whitney, Deputy Sheriff Welch and Constable Dickerman.

Upon representations from the witness after the cross examination had ceased, the judge gave him permission to return to his home in Bradford, but counsel for the defense improved the opportunity to introduce him as a witness for the defense and direct examination proceeded with Mr. Hoar questioning.

Answering Mr. Hoar's questions regarding the taking of Otis Williams' statement, the former state's attorney said that he and Judge Hayford, meaning the assistant judge, were accompanied by Irving Worthley, a stenographer. There was only one examination, he said, but it was continued from time to time and at different places. Asked if the farmhand were under oath when the statement was taken, Mr. Williams pondered a moment and then replied that he could safely say that the oath was administered by the judge and that the confession was taken down by Worthley and by him transcribed. Asked where the statement was at the present time, the witness testified that he had sent it to the attorney general and state's attorney, later amplifying the reply by saying that they were shipped by express to his successor, State's Atty. Sherburne of Randolph. The witness also testified that he had in his possession an expres receipt from the agent at Bradford. He was not cross examined.

The Sugar House Described. Myron J. Buck, the Bethel surveyor, was next introduced by the state and he was still on the stand when the court the sugar house as Mrs. Felch. Witness dropped to both knees, as stated therein, pointed out marks on the sugar house plan which, he said, indicated spots of blood which he saw on the floor of the sugar house April 26, 1916. He described in detail measurements taken by him in the sugar house and all of his plans were exhibited before the jury.

It's a Good Sign

when a man has his house wired for electric service. It's a sign that his family is going to have the benefit of a modern, properly designed lighting system--best for the eyes, best for the purse!

It's also a sign that his wife is going to be freed from the old drudgery of housework---the electric iron, cleaner and cooking appliances will do the work for her, while the electric fan keeps the house cool no matter how hot it may be outside.

Best of all, it's a sign that the man is abreast of the times and that life is going to be more worth living from now on for the whole family.

Your house can be wired in a few days' time at little expense and no bother to you. Why delay?
